Road accidents of late have been on the increase on our roads. This is true for both urban and rural areas. However, on average, the cities top the scale as far as occurrence of such accidents is concerned. This is because there are more vehicles in the cities than in the rural areas. There are a number of factors for the increase in road accidents in both urban and rural areas.

Probably, what comes to mind first is the fact that many people do not know how to use the road. For instance some pedestrians just cross the road anyhow without checking to the left or right of the road to see if there is any oncoming vehicle or vehicles. Added to this the rule that pedestrians should stick to the right of the road is sometimes not adhered to. This is due to ignorance and mere carelessness by road users. Drunken road users are the worst as they stagger from left to right on the middle of the road and it becomes inevitable for a speeding vehicle not to hit them.

Then there is the issue of over – speeding by motorists. This is also the commonest cause of road accidents. Saloon vehicles are not supposed to go beyond one hundred kilometres per hour on our roads. Over speeding is bad because once the car swerves usually loses control or fails to apply emergency brakes leading to the car overturning. Over speeding also reduces visibility on the road as the eyes cannot match the distance covered within a second.

Thirdly, one cannot forget the road itself. Most roads in our country are in bad shape. They have unpredictable corners, deep potholes, the width is very small and generally with bumpy surfaces. In such roads, control of the steering wheel becomes difficult and accidents are inevitable.

Finally, there is the problem of unroadworthy vehicles. Most vehicles operating on our roads are not road worthy. The brakes do not function properly, no rear view mirror the hood is corroded and the tyre are worn out. Many accidents are caused by the bursting of tyres. This can only be checked if Traffic Police Officers on our roads intensify their inspection to flush out such vehicles from our roads. Basically , safety on the road is very road users' duty to ensure. We all value our lives

SECTION B: COMPREHENSION(40 marks)*2. Read the following passage carefully. Then answer all the questions that follow.

"Beat him up! Finish him! Burn him! Torch his house!" The crowd yelled in unison as they forced the door open. I made no attempt to voluntarily open the door. The crowd's bloodthirsty shouts scared me to death.

"What crime have I committed?" I wondered to myself inwardly. I looked at the clock. It was well past midnight, and I was alone in the house.

"Open the door before we break it!" The banging and pushing of the door continued. The noise became deafening. The door soon gave way, and the sea of humanity surged forward, armed with assorted weapons. They forced their way into my bedroom. I almost passed out with fear. They fished me out of bed into the open, outside the house. No questions were asked. Clubs and weapons of any description landed on me. Soon, I was drenched in blood. I smelt death.

Up until this moment, the crime the crowd accused me of committing was totally alien to my nature. They were accusing me of raping a young girl. This was not time to worry about my alleged crime, but to pray inwardly to the Almighty God to receive me in His kingdom for I was sure that I was going to die.

One lone voice among the crowd objected to the crowd taking the law into their hands. He advised the crowd not to carry out mob justice. He suggested instead, that they should take me to the police station. The crowd obliged.

That was how I found myself at the police station. The police quickly whisked me to a cell, their boots and baton sticks escorted me into the cell. I was not given a chance to explain myself nor to write a statement. My whole body ached. By then, my limbs ached, my head and face were swollen. I could feel my eye sockets closing in such that seeing was becoming a problem. I pleaded with one of the police officers to take me to hospital. My request fell on deaf ears.

The following morning, two police officers came to fetch me from the cell. My ears were deaf. Had it not been for a cell-mate who alerted me that the police had called out my name to follow them for questioning, I would not have known.

In their office, the police informed me that they were going to take me to court. They said that the case was straightforward: I was caught raping a young girl in the neighbourhood.

Millions of questions without answers flooded my mind: "Who caught me? When? Who did I rape? Where?" All these questions were like voices in the wilderness. The police officers simply told me to sign a sheet of paper on which was scrawled words in English. I was then immediately handcuffed and led out down the road to the Magistrate's Court.

News of my arrest had spread like wild fire. The court room was jam-packed. I was led into the dock. For once, I experienced momentary respite, I breathed a sigh of relief like a free man. The handcuffs were removed from my hands as per court orders. The Magistrate entered the court chamber. I swore by the Bible, and the case commenced.

"Chiipiraadera Phwanyani Mwale", the Magistrate read out my name in a booming sonorous voice.

CANDIDATE NAME _____

"Bwana!" I replied in a quaking quivering voice.

"You are charged with raping that little girl over there standing beside the Prosecutor. This case happened last night. Do you admit or deny the charge?" He paused.

"I don't know what you are talking about, my Lord. I deny the charge," I replied.

"Police Prosecutor, can you start cross-examining the accused suspect to establish the facts of the case?"

Immediately, the Prosecutor opened his file, and ordered the little girl beside him to get into the dock and answer his questions.

"Young lady, do you know this man in the dock?" That was his first question.

"No, Sir!" Replied the little innocent girl, much to the bewilderment of the Prosecutor.

People in the courtroom started murmuring and soon, the court messenger had to step forward and motion for silence.

"Are you sure this isn't the man who raped you last night?" The Police Prosecutor must have hoped inwardly that the girl's reply would be positive. To his surprise, a big "No" came from the girl's lips.

"Officer!" the little girl called out, "the man who raped me was not bloody with tattered clothes, and he had no swollen face as the man in the dock looks."

There was total silence in the courtroom. If a coin had fallen onto the floor, everyone would have heard it.

"Young lady, his face is swollen because of the beatings he received last night from good people who were defending you! Clear up your memory and recall everything!" The Prosecutor was almost shouting. He started to sweat profusely.

"Officer," the young girl went on. "May I ask a question: Why did the people beat him up? They disfigured him. He doesn't in any way look the way that man looked. Why did they do it?"

The Prosecutor's sweating continued. He had to wipe his brow several times.

"Officer, take the suspect to the hospital for treatment. We will proceed with this case when he regains his health again. I therefore, adjourn the case!" The Magistrate stood up. Everyone followed suit and trooped out of the courtroom.
